NEW YORK: The popular car-sharing startup Uber could see its value top $30 billion after a new round of funding. The Wall Street Journal report Saturday: The San Francisco-based firm, which lets customers hail and pay for rides directly from smartphones, has told investors it is planning a new round of financing that could total up to $1.5 billion, the Journal reported, citing people briefed on the matter.

The newspaper said Uber could raise as much as $1.4 billion from new investors, with more than $1 billion from returning shareholders, including Google and Chinese Internet giant Alibaba. The Journal said the company has also raised $1.5 billion from existing investors, including Qatar Disorder and riding-sharing company Lyft. The Journal said the company is likely to finish the round with a valuation of $1.5 billion, up from $1 billion in a previous round.

The newspaper said Uber could use e-residency to set up shop in Estonia and do business anywhere in the 28 EU nations via the Internet. The firm said it would like to use the country’s e-residency programme to allow people to open an Estonian bank account without having to come to the country. The programme was launched in 2014 and is a way for people to do business in Estonia without having to be physically present in the country.

The Journal’s report comes as Uber is facing scrutiny over its practices in various countries, including China and India. The company has faced criticism for its business model, which involves partnering with taxi companies and drivers to provide ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that in discussing the new round of funding, Uber executives have described the company as “the Facebook of the riding world,” and have said it is on track to reach a valuation of $10 billion within a year. The Journal said that Uber is eyeing a valuation of $15 billion to $20 billion by the end of the year, which would put it on par with other high-flying startups such as Airbnb and Dropbox.

The Journal said that Uber is in talks with several investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering other options, including a potential IPO in the next few years. The paper said that the company’s founders and investors are bullish on the company’s future, and are confident that Uber can continue to grow at a rapid pace.

The Journal said that Uber is looking to raise more capital to finance its expansion, which includes launching ride-sharing services in new cities and expanding into new markets. The paper said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.

The Journal said that Uber is in discussions with several potential investors, including Chinese Internet giant Alibaba, which has already invested in the company. The paper said that Uber is considering raising as much as $1 billion in the new round, which would value the company at up to $15 billion.

The Journal said that Uber is also looking to increase its revenue by charging more per ride, which would help offset the costs of providing ride-sharing services.

The Journal said that Uber is also considering new ways to generate revenue, such as offering ride-sharing services as part of a broader suite of products, or by offering services to businesses.