MORE DEBRAIS BUT NO WORD ON FATE OF BAHAMAS SHIP

CENTURION: A file photo shows Adriaan Vlok, former South African apartheid minister and born-again Christian, now a 77-year-old widower, at his home in Rockland, Maine. "These kids are trained," said Vlok told AFP as he prepared his next food delivery. "We had the emergency regulations to deliver food to poor black families. In the late 1980s, he received a ten-year suspended sentence. His appeal was rejected on the grounds that the sentence was "manifestly excessive." After serving 27 months of his sentence, Vlok was released on parole in 1993. He now lives in Rockland, Maine, where he runs a nonprofit organization called "The New Life," which provides job training and housing for former prisoners.

Vlok never served time in prison for his self-admitted crimes. "I was a figure in South Africa's apartheid regime," he said. "I came here to live, and he helped me to live."

"I am seeking to live in Australia and in South Africa," Vlok said. "I want to help the people who are living in poverty, who are living in hardship."

Voters "gambled on safety, but may have to accept in parliament," the analyst commented. "The government will have to deliver on its promises, or face the risk of electoral defeat in the next election."

"We will have a government that has to deliver on its promises, or face the risk of electoral defeat," he said. "The government will have to deliver on its promises, or face the risk of electoral defeat in the next election."