Google's operating expenses in the third quarter amounted to $18.7 billion. After subtracting ad commissions, the company's operating margin was 71.7 percent, up from 68.5 percent in last year's third quarter. Both the third-quarter operating margin and the fourth-quarter margin were in the range of 71 percent, indicating that Google's success in the past six months, closed up 3.9 percent on Friday, was also a financial success.

The flank of the shift in the scope of human resource management is the technical and research oriented functions and the exploration of human resource management through improved information. The company's third-quarter report showed that its operating margin was 71.7 percent, which is similar to its margin in last year's third quarter. This indicates that Google's success in the past six months, closed up 3.9 percent on Friday, was also a financial success.

For a business function to be classified as a strategic one it must be able to perform the following three strategic management functions: strategic planning, strategic control, and strategic leadership. Earlier, human resource management was considered to be a non-strategic function, but it has now been redefined as a strategic function. The strategic planning function involves the development of plans and strategies that align employee performance and requirements with the overall goals and strategies of the organization. The strategic control function involves the evaluation of the effectiveness of these plans and strategies and ensuring that they are executed effectively. The strategic leadership function involves the development of plans and strategies that align the organization's goals and strategies with the goals and strategies of the employees. The strategic planning, strategic control, and strategic leadership functions are all critical to the success of a business function.

Another driver of the shift in the scope of human resource management lies in the "manpower planning" element. This element is concerned with the identification of the necessary competencies that are required to achieve the organization's goals and strategies. This element is also concerned with the development of plans and strategies that align the organization's goals and strategies with the goals and strategies of the employees.
