in order to find means of solving them.

Ghanem said that Kuwait is keen on sharing its democratic experience during the conference, which ends on September 26th, aiming to establish Islamic values in society, to encourage peace, democracy, and development, as well as sustainable development goals beyond 2015. The conference, held every five years at the UN, is to focus on boosting bilateral parliamentary ties with Kuwait’s General Assembly. The overall theme of the conference, due until tomorrow, is to focus on issues, including the holding of an exhibition on antiquities, in addition to a visual presentation during the conference. He said that Kuwaiti parliament was directly chosen by the people, adding that the Kuwaiti constitution played an integral part in shaping legislations and laws in the country.

Ghanem is also set to hold a number of bilateral meetings, on the sidelines of the conference, with his international counterparts to boost bilateral parliamentary ties with Kuwait’s National Assembly. The overall theme of the conference, due until tomorrow, is to focus on issues, democracy, and development, as well as sustainable development goals beyond 2015.

The conference features participation of 150 members. Speakers. The conference features participation of 150 members. The conference features participation of 150 members. Ghanem’s speech at the conference will include his remarks on the sustainability of the conference. He said that Kuwaiti parliament was directly chosen by the people, adding that the Kuwaiti constitution played an integral part in shaping legislations and laws in the country.

Ghanem is also set to hold a number of bilateral meetings, on the sidelines of the conference, with his international counterparts to boost bilateral parliamentary ties with Kuwait’s National Assembly. The overall theme of the conference, due until tomorrow, is to focus on issues, democracy, and development, as well as sustainable development goals beyond 2015.