WASHINGTON: Thursday marks the 20th anniversary of the September 11 terrorist attacks, followed by a series of deadly mass shootings. The Department of Justice has been conducting an investigation into the possibility of a link between the two events. The investigation is reportedly focusing on whether the attacks were coordinated by a single entity, or whether they were independent acts. According to officials, the investigation is still ongoing and has not produced any concrete evidence of a connection. However, some have speculated that the department is looking into the possibility of a broader plot that could have involved multiple attacks in different countries.

In other news, the US Department of Homeland Security has issued a new travel advisory for India, warning Americans to avoid travel to the country due to security concerns.
