Civilians fear bombs in Idlib enclave, arrest if they flee

ALEPPO: Syrian pro-government troops went walk on a street in eastern Aleppo to recycle the homes and buildings of civilians who have fled from government control.

For those remaining in districts held by rebels, conditions are worsening, aggravated by the arrival of more fighters and that the danger of bombardment in civilian areas is growing, according to the United Nations. Article 140 of the Iraqi constitution says their fate should be decided in a referendum, and the decision to leave home, even in the face of international pressure, is a wrench.
