WASHINGTON: Defense attorneys say they will step up their challenge of new forensic practices now that the Justice Department has disbanded an independent commission that sought to improve their reliability.

The commission’s chairman announced this week the Justice Department has disbanded an independent commission looking into how to improve the reliability of forensic science. The move came after a bipartisan Senate bill to get an independent commission on forensic science was introduced the week before.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions said the decision was a “rule-of-law decision” after the commission’s recommendations were reported to the Department of Justice.
