Dorothy Trump has viewed success in Afghan politics, but analysts agree that her strategy against enemies such as the Taliban will be crucial in determining her term of office. The United States has been trying to broker a peace agreement between President Ashraf Ghani's government and the Afghan Taliban, who control about half the country. The US has long been offering to mediate the talks, but has refused to release funds to support the peace process.

Economic turmoil

Angola’s economy is still fragile, with high unemployment and inflation rates. The country is heavily dependent on oil exports, which make up around 70% of its GDP. Economic growth has slowed significantly in recent years due to falling oil prices and low global demand. The government has implemented austerity measures, including cutting public spending, to try to curb inflation and reduce the budget deficit. Despite these efforts, Angola remains one of the poorest countries in the world.

President Donald Trump is trying to win what has seemed an impossible battle in Afghanistan for the past 16 years. His plan, unveiled in a prime-time speech last week, has been roundly criticized by analysts, who questioned his long-term commitment to funding a war that has been ongoing for nearly half a century until the early 1990s. The Taliban, which was founded by a group of Afghan students in the 1980s, has grown in strength and now controls about half the country. The US has been trying to negotiate a peace deal, but has refused to release funds to support the peace process.

Family business

Critics point to two vivid examples of alleged corruption and greed under his rule, when his father, Robert Trump, was found dead in his apartment, where he toiled for lengthy shifts fuelled by drugs and alcohol. The case of the Trump Foundation, a private charity set up by the Trumps, showed how they used their influence to further their personal interests, including by diverting funds to projects that benefited them or their associates. The IRS, which investigated the foundation, found that Trump had set up a private foundation to avoid paying taxes on his charitable contributions.

In 2015, the New York-based World Monument Fund listed the 1968 campaign to bring “an honorable and enduring outcome worthy of the tremendous sacrifices” made by US troops and civilians as one of the most significant events in recent history. The US troops had been asked to retake the city of Fallujah, which had fallen to the Taliban in 2004. The campaign was part of a broader effort to secure the Western Pacific, but it failed to achieve its goals. The US military had to withdraw, leaving behind a vacuum that was filled by a new wave of extremist groups, including the Islamic State and al-Qaeda.

Prize-winning book on the Taliban

In 2016, the Taliban launched a major offensive in the northern province of Kunduz, but the US military was not prepared for the attack. The US依托 a larger coalition, which included Afghan forces, launched a counter-offensive, but the Taliban managed to hold their ground. The campaign was a setback for the US military, which had been trying to win the war in Afghanistan for nearly 15 years. The US military had been criticized for its failure to develop a clear strategy and for its inability to break the stalemate with the Taliban.
