HAMBURG: Raging street battles that marred Germany’s G20 summit have sparked a political fallout over the city’s handling of protests, officials and analysts said yesterday.

HAMBURG: US President Donald Trump and British Prime Minister Theresa May agreed yesterday to move quickly to impose new tariffs in an escalating trade dispute with the European Union, Brussels was on high alert and would “do everything possible” to protect its dairy products, the Financial Times reported Friday.

However, “it will be very hard politically to head off the war cliff edge at the G20 summit in Hamburg,” the newspaper thundered Saturday. “Europe can’t be placed on the same level with unfair competition practices that it is possible to seal its borders. On Friday, leaders agreed that “excess capacity in sectors such as steel, aluminium and solar photovoltaics will come under a magnifying glass, as they have still to cooperate on those issues if we want to have a chance to really work with the US to reduce tariffs, the Financial Times reported Friday.”

“Very speedy” reaction if the US targets Germany: Hamburg chairman Jan Reinecke told news weekly Die Spiegel.

HAMBURG: US President Donald Trump has vowed “very speedy” reaction if the US targets Germany: Hamburg chairman Jan Reinecke told news weekly Die Spiegel.

GAMBIA: Revenge on the rocks? The West African nation is mired in a political crisis after chaotic elections marred in focus. England greats are all eyes on the Kabale Conference this week. It may not be the biggest G20 summit, but it is expected to draw attention from leaders around the world, as they try to find common ground on issues including trade, climate change and security.

GAMBIA: Revenge on the rocks? The West African nation is mired in a political crisis after chaotic elections marred in focus. England greats are all eyes on the Kabale Conference this week. It may not be the biggest G20 summit, but it is expected to draw attention from leaders around the world, as they try to find common ground on issues including trade, climate change and security.

HAMBURG: US President Donald Trump and British Prime Minister Theresa May agreed yesterday to move quickly to impose new tariffs in an escalating trade dispute with the European Union, Brussels was on high alert and would “do everything possible” to protect its dairy products, the Financial Times reported Friday.

However, “it will be very hard politically to head off the war cliff edge at the G20 summit in Hamburg,” the newspaper thundered Saturday. “Europe can’t be placed on the same level with unfair competition practices that it is possible to seal its borders. On Friday, leaders agreed that “excess capacity in sectors such as steel, aluminium and solar photovoltaics will come under a magnifying glass, as they have still to cooperate on those issues if we want to have a chance to really work with the US to reduce tariffs, the Financial Times reported Friday.”

“Very speedy” reaction if the US targets Germany: Hamburg chairman Jan Reinecke told news weekly Die Spiegel.

HAMBURG: US President Donald Trump has vowed “very speedy” reaction if the US targets Germany: Hamburg chairman Jan Reinecke told news weekly Die Spiegel.

GAMBIA: Revenge on the rocks? The West African nation is mired in a political crisis after chaotic elections marred in focus. England greats are all eyes on the Kabale Conference this week. It may not be the biggest G20 summit, but it is expected to draw attention from leaders around the world, as they try to find common ground on issues including trade, climate change and security.

GAMBIA: Revenge on the rocks? The West African nation is mired in a political crisis after chaotic elections marred in focus. England greats are all eyes on the Kabale Conference this week. It may not be the biggest G20 summit, but it is expected to draw attention from leaders around the world, as they try to find common ground on issues including trade, climate change and security.