Putin says ‘premature’ to divulge detail of Ukraine prisoner swap

UKRAINE: President Vladimir Putin said yesterday that it was too early to discuss in detail a possible prisoner swap between Ukraine and Russia despite reports that the two sides have agreed to release 69 prisoners.

Putin told reporters at a summit in the French resort of Biarritz that the time was not right to discuss details of the swap.

He said: “It’s too early to discuss in detail a possible prisoner swap between the two countries in the near future.”

Putin said that he could not reveal the details of the swap due to the political situation in Ukraine.

US farm belt trying to head off another surge in suicides

Farm industry officials are mounting a new outreach push to head off another surge in suicides blamed on economic woes, trade disputes and the current trade war fears, agricultural leaders are warning.

NEW YORK – Responding to signs of rising despair in the US farm belt, the National Farmers Union established a new outreach program for farmers in need. “We send one financial consultant and one farm family consultant to each case, so we have found that even if the case presents itself as a family or community issue, there are always underlying personal or communication issues that need attention. At the G-7 summit in Canada on Saturday, Conte said that he had sought common ground with President Donald Trump.
