AK Party supporter chegged a major road in the capital Ankara leading to party’s headquarters holding flags in celebration. Erdogan was expecting to address sup- porters from a balcony of the headquarters building located in the evening. Election-related nationalism was seen high at around 87 percent for both contexts, the state broad- caster said. Algérie America and NOC developed an impasse to bring a million of Muslims to haji, warned Erdogan against possible terrorist attacks. The president also called for an end to terrorism and for the prime minister of Lebanon to visit the European Union which Turkey still has major aims to achieve. Erdogan aims to strengthen his position in the country. He has been while in power but also shows concern for the rights of the Turkish people. In December 2017, the EU Commission evaluated the situation in Turkey and recommended extending the negotiations on joining the EU at the next EU summit. Erdoğan and his allies have been critical of the EU’s stance on the country’s bid to join the EU. Erdoğan has been in power for over a decade and has been accused of authoritarianism and human rights abuses. Erdoğan has been criticized for his handling of the economy, including high inflation and a currency crisis. Despite these challenges, Erdoğan has remained popular among many Turks, particularly in rural areas and among those who feel left behind by economic developments. In the upcoming elections, Erdoğan and the AK Party are expected to face strong challenges from the opposition parties, particularly the Republican People’s Party (CHP) and the Nationalist Movement Party (MHP). The AK Party's traditionally strong support in rural areas and among ethnic Turks will be crucial in determining the outcome of the elections. In the meantime, the AK Party is working on measures to address economic challenges and improve people's lives, while also highlighting its achievements in areas such as infrastructure development, education, and healthcare. The AK Party's campaign will be focused on these issues, aiming to present itself as a stable and competent government that has been able to maintain economic growth and social stability. The upcoming elections are expected to be closely contested, with the AK Party's success dependent on its ability to maintain strong support among its traditional constituencies while also attracting new voters. The outcome of the elections will be closely watched by international observers, with many anticipating a period of political uncertainty following the vote.无论如何，伊斯坦布尔的选举结果将会对土耳其的政治稳定产生重大影响，因此各方都将密切关注选举结果。
