By Dr James J Toby

On March 24, three warlords were formally brought down from the authorities. Protest leaders from the alliance announced yesterday that the military regime is not in a position to make the proposed peace deal workable. The armed groups said they would continue to fight until civilian rule is secured.

The ceremony in Bambari on April 15 was to hand over the city of Bambari to the national authorities after the tripling of bread prices that struck the city of Bambari in the first place. The city has been in a state of tension since last year, when the government ordered the closure of several shops. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.

CAR city casts worried eye at rise of warlords

E ven the staunchest of the Central African Republic’s warlords was not immune to the latest bout of violent conflict in the country. The latest violence comes amid a growing number of civilian casualties and a sense of uncertainty about the future of the country.

The city of Bambari, a crossroads town in the centre of the country, has been in a state of tension since the government ordered the closure of several shops in December. The residents of the city have been stocking up on supplies and have been on strike.

Meanwhile, another putsch attempt has been thwarted and the coup attempt continues to evolve. A military council has been formed to take charge of the country and the head of the Central African Patriotic Movement (CAP) is also among those arrested.